Deputy Director of Finance & Procurement

Nottingham ▪ Band 9 plus market supplement ▪ c.£95,000

Nottingham University Hospitals NHS Trust is now one of the largest in the UK with an annual budget of around £600m. The Trust was formed on 1 April 2006, when two top-rated trusts, the Queen's Medical Centre and Nottingham City Hospital, merged in order to develop and deliver high-quality, sustainable patient services.

Nottingham University Hospitals NHS Trust was named one of the top five teaching Trusts in the UK in the 2007 'Good Hospital Guide' by health information specialist Dr Foster. The guide says that among the key factors of this success were strong partnership working and high quality information.

As a major teaching trust, NUH enjoys close links with the City's Universities and attracts and develops the highest calibre of staff. The vision and ambition of NUH is to be the country's leading Teaching Trust by 2016.

This is an unrivalled and exciting opportunity that will allow you to realise your true potential. You will be leading all day-to-day, operational financial control and management, along with procurement. This is a role which will also develop your strategic thinking and influencing capabilities, as you will deputise for the Director of Finance, be instrumental in leading on the Trust's £25m per annum Capital Programme and FT application alongside working with external and strategic partner organisations.

You may be an existing Director or Deputy Director of Finance, keen to develop your career and a national reputation for achieving success in one of the UK's largest and most complex organisations. Adept at leading change through people, you are an ambitious and insightful business leader with outstanding communication skills and gravitas. Offering an impeccable track record, you will be a qualified accountant with a sound understanding of the NHS market.
